"Really the school and the home should be joint centres of right education and should in no way be opposed to each other with the parents doing one thing and the school doing something entirely different." - J Krishnamurti. It is important for us that children grow in harmony and without conflict. To help us understand what you are looking for we would like your thoughts on any three of the following in not more than a hundred words each. (these are extracts from the book 'Education and the Significance of Life' - J Krishnamurti)

1. To be aware means to be sensitive, alive to the things about one, to nature, to people, to colour, to trees, to the environment, to the social structure, the whole thing; to be aware outwardly of all that's happening and to be aware of what is happening inside. (Krishnamurti at Brockwood Park 1977, Discussion 2)

How might we nurture this awareness in children?

2. In our relationship with children and young people, we are not dealing with mechanical devices that can be quickly repaired, but with living beings who are impressionable, volatile, sensitive, afraid, affectionate; and to deal with them we have to have great understanding, the strength of patience and love. (Education and Significance of Life – J. Krishnamurti)

Recount an incident from your experience with your child that brings out the truth of this statement.

3. School is a place of learning and not merely a place for accumulating knowledge. (The Whole Movement of life is Learning – J. Krishnamurti)

If a school is a place where knowledge is only one part of what you learn, what else would you like your child to learn through schooling?

4. Real learning comes about when the competitive spirit has ceased. (On Education – J. Krishnamurti)

From your experience why might competitiveness come in the way of real learning?

5. “When you compare yourself with another, ideologically, psychologically, or even physically, there is the striving to become that; and there is the fear that you may not. It is the desire to fulfil, and you may not be able to fulfil. Where there is comparison there must be fear.” (On Fear - J Krishnamurti)

Comparison is usually seen as a great motivator. The above statement says something different. Would you agree with the above statement that where there is comparison there must be fear?
